By John Concillo
The scale of this map leads you to believe that you can find your way around back roads. Not true. This is the kind of map that calls out individual buildings leading you to believe you will know when you are approaching the maze of Italian streets that are everywhere, even in "new" parts of town. It's just not accurate. Some cities, Gela for example go on for 10 kilometers that are not called out on this map. Even more befuddling is the lack of road numbers on the map. Many major roads have no number attached. My advice. Don't go to Sicily without a GPS or some navigation device. The price of this map is not worth it. Period.

While detailed you could never actually open the map in a car. It would take up the entire car. Only useful if you can open it some place huge.
