By Roger Q. Callaway
This directory lists companies by name and product, and reports total money donated to both political parties, and divides the total into Repub and Dem. It is easy to use, has an index in the back etc. It gives sufficient information to determine that even though a company gave 100% to one party or the other, it was only $100.00. It is nice to know what sort of place you are supporting with your shopping dollars.

By M. Kleczewski
This guide provides an excellent overview of companies political contributions and policies. Useful regardless of your political leanings. Language appears to be non-biased. Some items were rather refreshing to find, and other companies were rather shocking. Highly recommended.

By summarizing the political contributions and business practices of hundreds of corporations, this handy directory helps you support companies that share your political values. Follow your money; you might be surprised. The Blue Pages includes valuable information on political contributions to each major party, employee benefits and labor practices, lawsuits and investigations, and community and charitable programs. As this information starts to affect these companies at the cash register, they may be less inclined to support positions that conflict with their customers' values. The Blue Pages organizes companies alphabetically into 13 sectors, making it easy to find a particular product or service. A complete index allows you to find companies and brands even more quickly. Using this Zagat-style pocket reference, you can be conscientious about something you do every day - shop. Slim and portable, The Blue Pages is easy to put in a backpack or purse. It also makes a wonderful gift
